MOKENA WOMAN SERIOUSLY HURT AS AUTO UPSETS

Martin Meuhler of Mokena figured in a serious auto accident on route 66 three miles south of Joliet Sunday evening while on his way home from a visit with friends.

The glaring lights of an approaching car blinded him. The pavement was slippery from a rain storm and in attempting to slow down, the car suddenly began to sway and tipped over. Mrs. Meuhler who was riding in the front seat sustained a serious injury to her neck. She was removed to the St. Joseph hospital in Joliet where 7 x-ray pictures were taken before it was discovered that a bone was broken in the neck vertebra. She has been placed in a cast and will have to remain in the hospital for some time.

Mr. Meuhler sustained cuts and bruises about the head and left shoulder.

Two sons, John and Ludwig were also in the car. John escaped injury but Ludwig received a cut on the hand. The car was very badly damaged.

Editor's Family Returns From 6000 Mile Jaunt

Mrs. Wm. Semmler, daughters Adeline and Ada and friend and neighbor, Dorothy Hall, returned to Mokena Sunday afternoon after a 6000 mile auto trip thru the west.

They left Mokena July 12 going to Seattle, Wash., over the northern route thru the beautiful mountains and the national forests of Montana, Idaho and Washington. They report wonderful mountain roads.

Seattle is a beautiful city, with lovely lawns and flowers every where. They spent two weeks in Seattle in the home of Mrs. Semmler's sister, Mrs. W. A. Campbell and family. While there they enjoyed a trip thru a fishery and watched a boat from Alaska unload it's $4500 load of fish which included $500 worth of halibut liver for Parke-Davis Co.

From Seattle they went to Portland, Oregon and spent two days in the home of Mrs. Semmler's nephew, Geo. Campbell and family.

While there they enjoyed a trip to the Pacific ocean.

From Portland they went to Ogden, Utah and spent two days in another nephew's home, Theo. Campbell and family. As Ogden is only 38 miles from Salt Lake City, they spent an afternoon in the later place and went thru the Mormon tabernacle and grounds and also went out to the Lake.

From Ogden they next went to Laketown, Utah and spent a day and night at the Shirley Nebeker ranch. Mr. Nebeker is a brother of Stokes Nebeker of Mokena, who is a brother-in-law of Dorothy Hall a passenger on this motor trip.

On the homeward trip they came thru the Medicine Bow mountains where the road is above the tree line and saw the place where the battle of the wind and trees take place with the latter losing because they cannot stand up, and lean way over against the side of the mountains.

They enjoyed going thru the deserts and their only hot day was while in Nebraska, returning.

On the way from Portland they traveled beside the Columbia river, which is a most beautiful drive in the mountains and one never to be forgotten.

National Topics Interpreted
By WILLIAM BRUCKART
NATIONAL PRESS BLDG. WASHINGTON, D. C.

Washington.—The government's silver policy again is attracting attention. Several things have caused it. First among these things is the matter of rising prices for foods and other necessities of life, but attention seems to have centered on the silver question again as a result of the Treasury's newly arranged agreement to trade some of its gold for some of the Chinese silver.

Probably the silver question is not as widely discussed as it might be because it is a complex subject and there are not too many people who understand it and its implications.

I cannot refrain at this time, however, from recalling that when the silver act of 1934 was passed, I wrote in these columns a prediction that the country sooner or later would regret that legislation. I repeat the statement now and I do not believe it will be long until the average citizen will recognize what the silver policy is doing to most of us. I mean by that, it will not be long until Mr. John Q. Public will understand that the silver policy has a lot to do with the high prices he is paying for his pound of bacon, his slice of beefsteak or a thousand and one items that he buys at the grocery store. He will feel it, too, when he seeks to buy a new suit of clothes or a new pair of shoes. There can be no argument about it: The effect of inflation brought about by a perfectly ridiculous silver policy is upon us.

Early in July, the Chinese minister of finance visited Washington and called personally at the Treasury to express the appreciation of the Chinese government for the satisfactory conclusion of negotiations that enable the Chinese to give the American Treasury silver for gold. It was the usual diplomatic courtesy. At the same time, however, the visit of the Chinese minister served to awaken America to the fact that the Treasury has been going along, buying silver from foreign countries in order to maintain an arbitrary price which the Washington administration contended should be the world price for silver. This price is forty-five cents an ounce, and it is a most profitable price for silver producers in Mexico and Canada and some other foreign countries. It is not as profitable, however, as the price the Treasury pays to American producers—which is seventy-seven and one-half cents an ounce.

But, one may ask, what has this thing to do with the cost of beefsteak, ham and eggs or shoes?

I hope I may be able to explain it as I have watched the picture unfold and to explain it in a manner that those unacquainted with high finance may see the thing in its true light.

First of all, the policy of the administration that has brought billions of gold into the Treasury to be stored as so much dead weight has resulted in many thousands of shares of stock in American corporations or their bonds being bought by foreigners who gave gold in payment. President Roosevelt early in his administration insisted that gold should not be in circulation as money. Consequently, the Treasury has so much gold that it has had to build separate storehouses to protect it. Now, we are sending some of that gold to China in trade for China's silver. I think most everyone will agree that the silver is just as useless because we have no need for it in our currency structure. People do not want to carry silver dollars around in their pockets.

Assuming that the exchange was simply an even trade of two objects, neither of which was usable to us, one probably could dismiss the matter with a wave of the hand. Regrettably, such is not the case. The additional silver frankly is adding to our troubles because of the Silver Act of 1934 which permits the Treasury to issue currency—silver one-dollar bills—against it.

So, instead of being sterilized and stored away in vaults, the silver accession results in a prompt increase in the amount of currency in circulation. That action tends to increase the excess reserve—unused money—of the banking system. As this money becomes available for circulation, its value necessarily and obviously is cheapened. Or, to say it another way, the things you buy with money become of greater value because it takes more of these pieces of currency to buy the same quantity of food or clothes or shoes.

Authorities will disagree with the above statement to the extent that all kinds of currency have not been expanded (which means inflated) by the issuing of silver certificates. That is true. But we must be realistic and recognize that a silver certificate occupies exactly the same place in our currency structure as does a bill that is backed by gold or one that is issued by the Federal Reserve banks. Therefore, it seems to me to be a fair statement to say that the whole currency structure is tainted by this deluge of silver certificates now and heretofore coming from the Treasury. And it is equally a fact that prices of every kind are going to increase exactly in accordance or in ratio with the new money that is put out from the Treasury.

I do not know how long it will be until the voters wake up to the necessity for repeal of the silver act. It probably will not be long before there is a wave of public indignation against the policy if the average person realizes that the program is actually a tax upon the American public. Surely, if the silver policy were labeled, "tax to support the silver program," the attitude of the country would change overnight. That really should be the name of the Silver Act of 1934 because that is its effect. The tax results from the fact that the Treasury is paying foreign producers as well as American producers prices for silver that are higher than the value of the silver warrants. This means that any article of silver that you buy in a store costs you more than it would if silver producers abroad and in the United States were not being subsidized. The additional cost is a tax on every buyer just as much as though you had paid the tax directly into the Treasury.

It may be interesting to know that the Treasury has issued nearly eight-hundred million in silver certificates. In addition something like seven million silver dollars have been coined, and these still remain in the package in which they were wrapped at the mints. Besides all these, there is silver bullion that cost $375,000,000 piled up in the Treasury. Silver certificates can be issued against this.

The silver act of 1934 provided that the Treasury could buy one dollar's worth of silver to three dollars' worth of gold for what is called reserve purposes. On the basis of the gold now held, the Treasury can buy under that law a total of $4,125,000,000 in silver. At the present time Treasury records show we have silver reserves amounting to around $2,600,000,000. These figures show, or ought to show, how much inflation lies ahead—how much higher prices may go—unless something is done to restore a sound currency policy in the United States.

Some Democrats who are not too friendly with Postmaster General Jim Farley, along with the Republicans in congress, are having fun these days with the Democratic National committee. They are also succeeding, it appears, in making President Roosevelt's political seat uncomfortably warm. Nothing will come of it except that the subject will fill many newspaper columns of attack and defense as the politicians shoot back and forth.

To review the situation, it should be recalled that the Democratic National committee found itself in debt to the tune of about $650,000 at the end of the 1936 campaign. Some bright mind in the Democratic National committee conceived the idea of selling Democratic campaign handbooks to corporations at $250 per book, or more, as a means of raising money.

To make the book attractive, a single sheet bearing the autograph of Franklin Delano Roosevelt was inserted. Hundreds of corporations were solicited, and hundreds bought the books—theoretically, because of the autograph of the President. Mr. Roosevelt stated he did not know he was autographing the blank sheets for the purpose for which they were used.

Republican Leader Snell, of New York, introduced a resolution in the house of representatives, proposing an investigation of the sale of these books to corporations. He contended that it was a violation of the corrupt practices act.

Mr. Snell remained determined, however, and sought to harass the New Deal further by asking Attorney General Cummings for an official opinion. At the same time, he read on the floor of the house a long list of corporations who had bought the "souvenirs" of the 1936 campaign, together with a list of prices they had paid.

These facts cut deeply into the Democrats who are seeking to protect Chairman Farley and the Democratic National committee wiggled and squirmed. Nevertheless, Mr. Snell may as well have butted his head against a stone wall since he got no further than Representative Rayburn, the house Democratic leader, would have gotten, if Mr. Snell had been majority, instead of minority, leader.

SAMMY JAY CALMS DOWN

EVERYBODY on the Green Meadows and in the Green Forest who heard Sammy Jay thought he had gone crazy. He certainly acted as if he were crazy. He couldn't sit still long enough to answer questions, but flew here and flew there, and flew everywhere, all the time screaming so fast that he mixed his words all up. It was no wonder that his neighbors thought Sammy Jay was crazy.

But he wasn't. No, sir, he wasn't. He was just excited, terribly excited.

He hunted up Unc' Billy Possum and asked him what all the fuss was about.

ed. And it was all because of what he had seen deep in the Green Forest. But his little neighbors didn't know anything about this, and so they thought that something was wrong with Sammy's head, and they said to each other: "Poor Sammy Jay. Isn't it too bad? What could have happened to make him go crazy?"

Now, all this made Sammy worse than before. You know, when you try to tell a thing and people cannot understand you, you are very apt to grow impatient. Most people are, anyway. And it was so with Sammy Jay. He tried to tell what he had seen, but was so excited that his words tumbled over each other and were so mixed up that no one could understand what he was trying to tell, and this made Sammy more excited than ever, so that his talk was more mixed up than ever. Worse still, he began to lose his temper, and he quite lost it. So when Blacky told him to come to the Lone Pine with him, Sammy went.

"Now, Sammy, tell me all about it," said Blacky, when they were comfortably seated in the Lone Pine. So Sammy began at the beginning and told his story, and this time he told it quite straight, for every time he began to get excited Blacky would fix his sharp eyes on him in a way that made Sammy feel uncomfortably, and he would at once calm down. It was a queer story Sammy told, and when he had finished Blacky the Crow looked as if he didn't believe a word of it. Poor Sammy saw this.

"You don't think I am crazy, too, do you, Cousin Blacky?" he asked. "I don't know," replied Blacky. "I really don't know what to think."

FIRST-AID TO AILING HOUSE

By ROGER B. WHITMAN

DULL DOOR KNOBS

TWO years ago a Colonial house was built in my neighborhood; small but very charming in design and appearance. It was quickly bought and occupied. The new mistress was very proud of it, and tried to keep it in its new condition. But inevitably, it began to deteriorate. One thing that greatly troubled her was the appearance of the hardware of the front door; the door knob and its plate, the push button and the knocker. When new, these were shiny brass, and weekly polishing was part of the house-mistress' schedule. After a year or so, however, she found that the metal no longer responded.

A glance was enough to show that the brass did not go all the way through; that it was only on the surface. The body of the hardware was steel, and was exposed as polishing took off the brass plating. The builder saved a little money for himself in using brass-plated steel instead of solid brass, although at the most it could not have been more than a dollar or two.

My advice was to replace the cheap metal with other pieces of solid brass, which could be had at any well stocked hardware store.

One disadvantage of steel hardware is that in time the paint around it becomes stained with rusty drip. With solid brass this does not occur.

PAINT ON WINDOW SILLS

Window sills and the rest of the inside trim around a window are usually finished with the same kind of paint that is used on the walls and other parts of a room. This inside paint is not intended to be exposed to weather; yet when a window is open, the window sills are no better protected than if they were outdoors. For this reason it is paint on the inside window sills that first becomes damaged. For protection, window sill paint and the paint on other nearby parts of a window can be given a coat of spar varnish. This, of course, is glossy but even so, it is better than the cracking, peeling, and even disappearance of the paint.

Always Beautiful

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

ZINNIA, gardenias, it's all the same to me, There isn't any difference, as far as I can see.

Hothouse flowers or ones like ours, I always think and say That anything is beautiful, is pretty, in a way.

Buttercup or gutter pup, an orchestra, a bird,

Always something to be seen or something to be heard,

Alleyway or valley way, a country road, a street,

Always something to be found, and always something sweet.

Silken hose or cotton clothes, it's all the same to me, There isn't any difference, as far as I can see.

Womenfolk are human folk, whatever they may wear,

Whether cotton, whether silk, I never really care.

Janitors and senators, in overalls or what,

Something good in all of them, the rest to be forgot.

Fellowmen, if yellow men, or white or black or red,

Chilly till they find a fire, and hungry till they're fed.

Many things and penny things, it's all the same to me, There isn't any difference, as far as I can see.

All we own, however known for property or lands,

All we own is in our hearts and never in our hands.

Things we love are far above whatever we possess,

Things we feel, not things we have, will bring us happiness.

What we need, not much indeed, and then our loves and dreams,

And life is always beautiful, or so it always seems.

GRAPHIC GOLF

By BEST BALL

SETS PRO PACE

ALF PADGHAM was the British professional golfer of the year 1936. His crowning achievement was winning the British Open title but even prior to this event he had won several major events. His yearly earnings total as well as his average score would compare favorably with that of high bracketed American pros. To win such an amount of money in English tournaments, one must have a monopoly on the prize events and it is just such a golf tycoon that Padgham proved to be. Padgham can put plenty of power and subsequent distance to his drives but they are not the result of great physical leverage but rather the product of smooth, leisurely swinging. This is the hallmark of the consistent golfer who can shoot par golf for round after round. Bobby Jones once observed that he had never known a first class golfer who did not possess large hands and feet. Padgham can boast of the former in good measure. To the English observer they compare favorably with Harry Vardon's, which means the ultra in British praise. While Padgham's game is now well rounded there was a time when his putting was the weak sister of his game. Practice cured this and his smooth flowing stroke is now good enough to more than hold its own with golf's greatest.

DINNER FOR TWO

By D. ALDRICH

© McClure Newspaper Syndicate, WNU Service.

TO JUDGE by the frequent consulting of her jeweled wrist watch and the impatient heel and toe movement of her small foot, she had been waiting some time.

The mezzanine of a hotel which had become rather questionable had no place for an extremely pretty young woman to wait.

She hated the ogling of the habitués who passed and repassed her. That was the reason she gave herself for going into a telephone booth near at hand and calling a number.

"Four-six-five-four! . . . Why, Plaza, of course. I said Plaza three times!" She dropped a coin in the box. "Well, there's your money but I'm sure it isn't the right number."

"Oh—Miss Carleton please. Doris? I've had a perfectly terrible time trying to get you. Yes—this is Peggy. Nothing special but I had to talk to somebody or I should go mad . . . No—Sedgwick hotel . . . Sedgwick . . . Waiting for Jim. No wonder you're astonished . . . No—haven't laid eyes on him for six weeks. He hasn't been home since the last flare-up. First time I've even heard his voice was yesterday when he called up and asked me for a final interview to arrange the details of the divorce I told him I wanted. Certainly I told him that!"

"He said to meet him on the Sedgwick hotel mezzanine at five-thirty and I got here exactly on the dot of six. What? No—Sedgwick, darling. Why not? . . . Oh—isn't it? Well, anyway, Jim said Sedgwick and here I am. I suppose he'll forget to come. Business—as usual. Oh . . . Wait—I've simply got to open this door. It's stifling in here. There . . . No—I don't care if the playboys hear what I'm saying. I've reached the point where I shall elope with the first man who asks me . . . Why—Doris Carleton! I believe you're in love with Jim yourself. You're simply poisonous to me! Good-by!"

Blinded by tears, she came out of the booth swiftly, nearly colliding with a tall, good-looking man who had been awaiting his turn. She stepped back startled.

He smiled hesitantly into her flushed face. "I'm sorry."

Then: "May I use the telephone for a minute?"

"I have not leased the telephone for the evening."

"But your conversation seems to have been cut off at the most interesting and emotional moment."

"What right had you to listen?"

"Merely the right of anyone whose hearing is not affected."

As he slipped quickly into the booth after this, she moved to the far end of the couch and gazed stormy-eyed into vacancy.

As he reappeared he mentioned casually, "Now—if you care to use the telephone again?"

"How generous of you! Unfortunately I'm just leaving. I had an appointment for five-thirty and it's now nearly seven."

He pursed his lips slightly as he checked this up with his watch but did not correct her. Instead:

"I can't imagine anyone's suggesting this as a place to meet—er—a woman of your sort. It's just a little—"

"I know." She flung up her chin and blinked rapidly.

"But nobody cares what happens to me any more."

He sat down beside her and smiled tenderly:

"So—it makes you feel that way, does it?"

"Certainly not. I'm not feeling any way at all. I'm just nervous—queer men about, staring. And I'm faint with hunger. I've been waiting here two hours without a mouthful to eat."

"Poor little girl! It's such a long two hours from six to six-thirty. He's a brute to keep you waiting for dinner!"

"But I never intended to have dinner with him. Never!"

"Oh—didn't you?"

He raised an eyebrow, then he bent over her tenderly in the way that made all women thrill to him.

"In view of what you have said—I hesitate to suggest it, but—I have a corking little table for two already reserved at the Cedric."

"The—Cedric?"

He nodded.

"Nice quiet little hotel. Not a bit like this hang-out. I hope you can see your way clear to accept."

"It might be misunderstood."

"Women are always misunderstood. Especially"—daringly—"wives."

She flushed.

"You seem to know a great deal about women," she added bitingly.

He grew suddenly grave.

"There have been only three in my life that registered. But I've realized within the past five minutes that there is likely to be a fourth."

"Evidently sure of yourself."

"No. On the contrary that is the fatal flaw in my technique. There may be other flaws. Will you help me? I need a confidante."

"About your three women?" she shrugged. "But if I must sing for my supper—Do we begin with the first love?"

He nodded dreamily. "I met her one night at a fraternity party, my senior year at college. She wore some sort of a fluffy white dress, I remember, and looked like an angel."

His eyes were shining. There was a queer feeling in her throat so she said: "Men are always sentimental about their first loves. Who came next?"

He laughed shortly.

"The next was a bride—married to an awful dub who didn't understand her at all. She was a beauty, radiant, laughing . . . sometimes I think I loved her best of all."

As he hesitated, she asked gently, "There was another, you said?"

"It's hard to tell you about the last one," he answered. "I—I lost her only recently."

She steeled herself against the pain in his voice.

"She was different somehow. I didn't realize it at first. She wasn't all light-hearted gaiety. She was just a slip of a girl and yet she had gone through hell—hell a man knows nothing about. Her boy—our boy didn't live. I—God, how I wanted my son! But I wanted her more. Maybe she didn't know that . . . When she came back, out of the shadows, the doctor told me that she could get well only on condition she have certain things. Those things took a lot of money. I had just dropped a fortune. I hadn't told her for fear it would worry her. So—I put every thought out of my mind save thought for her. I ate, drank and slept business. Well—I won the money that brought her back—but I had lost her."

"She couldn't have understood," the girl said softly.

"No woman understands—" bitterly. "She is always the one misunderstood." The other winced.

"That is why I said I'm cleared away now for a new romance."

He laughed suddenly, teasingly.

"And when I heard you say that you were ready to elope with any—"

She blazed at him:

"Jim Langley, you listened to every word I said to Doris!"

"It was a mighty lucky thing for you, Peggy, that I was the one. Jove, I have heart failure when I think of what might have happened to you in this hole of a place."

"But Jim, you said 'Sedgwick' as plainly as you could speak."

"Precious girl, I fairly shouted 'Cedric' where I've been stewing my head off until I happened to think that a little dumb-bell like you would—"

"Don't talk like a husband, not after—Jimmy, I didn't know you remembered the white dress . . . and you never even mentioned the baby—"

He lifted her hand and pressed his lips into the palm. "Did you really love me as a bride best?"

"I'll answer that at dinner, Honey. It's five minutes to seven!"

French Lean on Dueling;
Fists Regarded as Unfair

Private dueling in France is still a custom that persists after centuries, and there is a real reason for French dueling, not just a Heidelberg custom of giving the other fellow a scar on his cheek, but really settling a grave affair, writes a Paris United Press correspondent.

The cause of dueling is a legal one, according to J. Joseph-Renaud, who has officiated at many duels in France.

A man is insulted through an article which libels him, a slap in the face, or violation of the sanctity of the home. If a man were to bring a case of this sort to court he would receive perhaps 50 francs damages, rarely more, and the trial would make him a laughing stock. So he resorts to a challenge.

He finds two witnesses, usually his best friends, who call upon his insultor and present their demand for a public refutation. In most cases the opponent immediately turns the affair over to his two seconds. The four from then on handle the affair among themselves. They form a court of honor which discusses the terms of apology or retribution demanded. If they cannot reach agreement on some formula, the case has reached the stage of a duel. Ninety per cent of the cases are settled by the four seconds.

If the seconds have reached no agreement, they decide on a judge for the duel. Having found an experienced person whom all approve, the five then discuss terms of the duel. These terms are precise, and depend on the age of the combatants, the gravity of the insult, and the experience of the two duelists. The principle of dueling is that punishment with fists is not fair.

Pepper From Far East

Pepper was a luxury until comparatively recent times. A man named Vasco da Gama was responsible for that. About the year 1500 he found a trade route to the Far East round the Cape of Good Hope, according to an authority in London Answers Magazine. Most of the world's pepper comes from the Far East. It is extracted from the dried berries of a vine-like plant.

Vasco da Gama obtained for his native Portugal a monopoly of the pepper trade. The monopoly lasted until nearly the middle of the last century, and as late as 1830 the English had to pay a tax of 2s. 6d. a lb. Most people went without pepper in those days, or bought it from smugglers. Earlier still, about 400 A. D., pepper was so valuable that Alaric the Goth, after conquering Rome, demanded 3,000 pounds of it as an essential part of the city's ransom.

COLLECTING LIQUID RUBBER
ON FIRESTONE PLANTATIONS
IN LIBERIA

An ever-increasing supply of rubber comes from these plantations. Savings made by controlling raw materials and by more efficient manufacturing and distribution make extra values possible at no extra cost.

BECAUSE in Firestone Standard Tires—

YOU GET EXTRA PROTECTION AGAINST BLOWOUTS—eight extra pounds of rubber are added to every 100 pounds of cord by the Firestone patented Gum-Dipping process. By this process every cord in every ply is saturated with liquid rubber. This counteracts internal friction and heat that ordinarily cause blowouts.

YOU GET EXTRA PROTECTION AGAINST PUNCTURES—because under the tread are two extra layers of Gum-Dipped cords.

YOU GET EXTRA PROTECTION AGAINST SKIDDING—because the tread is scientifically designed.

YOU GET LONGER NON-SKID MILEAGE because of the extra tough, long-wearing tread.

IN MEMORIAM
SEMMLER Mrs. John. In loving memory of my beloved mother who passed away eight years ago, August 15, 1929.
How slender is life's silver cord,
How soon 'tis broken here!
Each moment brings a parting word

Are filled with grief and pain,
There is a hope the hope of heaven,
Where loved ones meet again.

Mokena Orioles Beat Married Men With Score 6 - 4

After adding another win to their string of victories our boys are out for more and are looking forward to a possible game with the old Mokena All Star Team if they can get together in the near future. That ought to make a swell game. What do you say, All Stars, are you game?

Next Sunday we play what looks like a real hard nut to crack, the Moran-Schlitz team of Joliet. This ought to be a great game to watch and I am sure all loyal fans will turn out and give us their fine support.

We are trying to book a game with the Barr Senators and hope to give you all a real thrill.

The Mokena Orioles wish to book more games and ask anyone to call Ed. Walsh or George Heanline for a date.

Thanks married men for a swell time and you fans for a good turn out.

See you all next Sunday when we hope to see John Balaz back behind the plate as umpire. All I got was two dirty feet and a lot of dirty looks.

Pickled Pine
Pickled pine is pine which has been subjected to a chemical treatment which ages it and gives to the wood surface something of the soft patina of old pine or "deal" from which the paint has been stripped. Pine was used for room interiors and furniture in England in the Eighteenth century, but it was never left in its natural state. For room paneling it was painted; for furniture—bookcases, cupboards and furniture—it was also painted, and for mirror frames, for which it was often used because it was easily carved, it was either painted or gilded.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE CHURCHES
"Spirit" was the subject of the Lesson-Sermon in all Churches of Christ, Scientist, on Sunday, August 8.

The Golden Text was, "No man hath seen God at any time. . . . Hereby know we that we dwell in him, and he in us, because he hath given us of his Spirit" (1 John 4:12, 13).

Among the citations which comprised the Lesson-Sermon was the following from the Bible: "God is a Spirit; and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth" (John 4:24).

The Lesson-Sermon also included the following passages from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy: "Spirit is God. . . . Moral and spiritual might belong to Spirit, who holds the 'wind in His fists'; and this teaching accords with Science and harmony" (p. 192).

MAKE YOUR OWN RED DEVIL'S FOOD CAKE MIX

A RED DEVIL'S food cake that will stay fresh for d-a-a-y's! This is the kind of a recipe that can be made up ahead of time and stored satisfactorily in the clean-washed, odor-free air of a modern ice refrigerator until you desire to bake it. And this makes it possible, you see, to serve the freshest of fresh Devil's Food Cake to family or friends just whenever you may wish to do so. RED DEVIL'S FOOD CAKE: Cream 1/2 cup butter, add 1 1/2 cups sugar slowly and beat well. Sift together 2 1/2 cups cake flour, 1 teaspoon baking powder, 1 teaspoon soda, 1/2 teaspoon salt and blend into first mixture. Then store this mix in a modern ice refrigerator until baking time draws nigh. When ready to bake, remove the mix from the refrigerator and break it up with a fork. Add 1/2 cup boiling water to 1/2 cup cocoa; mix until smooth. Cool until slightly warm. In the meantime, gradually add 1 cup sour milk and 2 beaten egg yolks to dry mixture, mixing thoroughly. Add slightly warm cocoa mixture and 1 teaspoon vanilla extract. Beat well. Fold in 2 stiffly beaten egg whites and pour in greased square loaf pan lined with greased wax paper. Let stand 10 minutes; bake in slow oven (325°) approximately 1 hour and 10 minutes, and do not cut for at least one hour after baking.

Tell your son about ELMO SCOTT WATSON

Tell Him What You've Found to Be True

● Tell him of the value, educationally, he will derive from reading this noted feature writer's historical articles as they appear regularly in this paper. He will probably say: "Sure, I like history, Pop, but . . ." But too often it's ponderous and drained of the vitality that makes history the stirring story that it is. Then reveal to him the skill with which this man makes dramatic phases of his country's history read like lively fiction.

● Show him that Mr. Watson's articles sometimes digress to other fields of American interest—to popular science, sports, the fine arts, industry, literature—to developments that will MAKE history . . . but read like romance.

You can feel secure in this guidance of your child's reading because Elmo Scott Watson's articles always are authoritative and are based upon the most painstaking research. In addition to writing these special articles, Mr. Watson serves as an instructor in feature writing at Medill School of Journalism, Northwestern University, and is co-author of a new book on the subject that has been adopted as a textbook by leading journalism schools throughout the nation.

The SNAPSHOT GUILD

SERMON TO VACATIONERS

The photographer, fairly close, took care to focus on the child, not on the distant scene. Exposure 1/100 second at f.8 on a fair day

THIS year when you go on your vacation, resolve to come back with better snapshots than you did a year ago.

Determine to take more care with your lens stops, your shutter speeds and your focusing. Decide that before you take a picture you will give thought to the light conditions; whether the day is hazy, dull or very dull; whether a midday sun is shining from a clear sky or the less intense early morning or late afternoon sun; whether the light is increased by reflections from expanses of water or sand; whether your subject is in average shade or deep shade; whether under any of these conditions you are photographing nearby objects or a distant scene. Say you will consider these things each time and carefully adjust your camera to fit them.

Make up your mind that you will think also about the composition of each picture, that it shall have merit because of its pictorial qualities and that in each scene showing human or other beings there shall be storytelling interest.

Declare that you will bring back from this year's vacation no more out-of-focus pictures nor underexposed or overexposed ones, nor pictures blurred by camera movement; no more of those lifeless pictures of persons just posing, nor "scenic" void of noticeable feature as an arm blanket, nor any more conglomerations of meaningless composite, shot at random for no good pictorial reason. Such pictures are, as you know, products of no ambition to make the best out of the possibilities of a person's camera, the film he uses and of himself as a photographer.

In terms of entertaining, eye-de-lighting, emotion-stirring and photographically excellent pictures, these possibilities are unlimited, and on vacations, whether you head for the ocean, mountain, lake, river, even the prairie or the desert, the opportunities for real pictures are unlimited. Do make up your mind this time to think before you shoot.

Special supplication: If you have never used a color filter, treat yourself to two or three of different types, or at least one average filter such as the K-2, and experiment with them before you start. Filters bring in clouds distinctly, cut through haze, combat too bright reflections from water or sea sand. Like deftly placed cosmetics on a lady's face, deftly used filters enhance beauty. Learn to use them. You will be surprised and delighted with the results.

Congress—And Its Responsibilities

By RAYMOND PITCAIRN

National Chairman
Sentinels of the Republic

Recent events at Washington indicate a renewed and encouraging recognition of our American demand for Government by the People.

For within the past few weeks many members of Congress have shown a fresh sense of responsibility to the great body of American citizens whom they were elected to represent.

Measures deeply affecting our form of government and our methods of life have received careful consideration and serious discussion in Congressional halls—in marked contrast to earlier habits of rush and jam.

The voice of the public—as expressed in the press and in appeals to individual members—has been heeded to a degree too seldom attained during the past few years.

The wishes of constituents have, in a number of recent cases, made their influence felt over the insistent voice of expediency.

All this is cheering to American citizens who regard Congress as their voice in government. And, undoubtedly, the names of those members who showed their sense of responsibility to the men and women they represent will be remembered at the polling places.

Blind and unquestioning enactment of measures prepared and written by heads of appointed boards, bureaus, and commissions to perpetuate their own temporary power, constitutes, in fact, a surrender of the authority vested in the American citizen through the principle of representation.

Careful and considered legislation enacted by a Congress elected under the provisions of our fundamental law, constitutes the American method of Government by the People.

Elephant Good Worker

One job in which the elephant seems to have no equal is breaking up the jams of teak logs that occur every few miles in the Menan river of Slam. The hundreds of animals that are engaged in this work not only have the power to push or pull these giant pieces of timber out of tightly held positions, but they are often better than their mahouts in finding the key log that is holding the jam.—Collier's Weekly.

Hold Final Rites For Orland Twp. Town Clerk

Joseph Creer, son of John Creer and Ellen Kissack Creer, was born Kirk Bradden Parish, Tremode, Isle of Man, June 17, 1879, and departed this life at his home a mile west and a mile north of the village of Orland Park, Illinois, U. S. A., August 5, 1937, aged 58 years, 1 month and 19 days.

In 1891, when Joseph was twelve years old, the family came to America and located in the Hyde Park district of Chicago. Six months later his mother died, and a little later, his brother William, aged four. Two children of the family had passed away some time before. They lived in Hyde Park until 1897 when they came to Orland township, Cook County, and settled on a farm three miles south of the village of Orland Park. On March 22, 1905, Joseph was united in marriage with Harriet Cooper, at the home of her parents, the late Mr. and Mrs. John T. Cooper Senior, where Howard Cooper now lives. They went to housekeeping on the Creer farm, Joseph operating the farm henceforth, while his father, went into the mercantile business in Alpine. In January, 1914, the Joseph Creer family, consisting then of the father, mother and three sons, moved from the farm three miles south of Orland Park to the farm a mile west and a mile north of Orland Park. Here their two daughters were born and this has been their home ever since.

Three years ago, on his birthday, Mr. Creer suffered a very serious injury which seems to have definitely weakened his entire system permanently. Early last February, there came serious trouble in one ear, which steadily grew worse until a mastoid operation was necessary in early April. He had not fully recovered from this when he was taken with stubborn stomach trouble, which was found to be due to ulcer. The first weeks of suffering from this has been very wearing. The human constitution can endure strain to a certain point then there comes sufficient breaking down of the tissue of nerve and brain to make effective mental control impossible. That point being reached, acts performed largely take the nature of accident, and are to be considered in no other light.

Mr. Creer has been known by all as a man of unusually fine abilities, sterling honesty, and unselfish devotion to his family and to the good of his neighbors and of all the people. He enjoyed the fullest confidence of all and was repeatedly trusted with heavy responsibility for the public good. He has been the very efficient Clerk of Orland township the past twelve years, his present term being not yet expired.

Much of the sturdiness of his character and life was due to his religious faith. He united with the Cumberland Presbyterian church in Hyde Park when some fourteen years of age. Just three months before his marriage, he transferred his membership to the Methodist Episcopal church at the English settlement. There he sang in the choir and taught a class of young men in the Sunday School for some time. English settlement church was merged with Orland Park Methodist church some years later and he has been a faithful member here till his death.

His companion of thirty-two years survives him with all of their children: Howard living at home, Willard living about three miles east of Orland Park, Everett of Mokena, Florence wife of Howard Spies living in Chicago, and Marion at home.

He is survived also by his father, John Creer of Orland Park, one brother, James E. Creer of Orland Park, and Lillian, widow of Walter Cooper, living on a farm near Mokena.

LIFE'S MISSION
I've oft heard it said as I've journeyed through life
That we all have a mission to fill.
And oft I've wondered if it really was true—
The truth is I'm wondering still.
There are many I know whose mission seems plain,
Their lives are so full of good cheer
And sunshine and love that they thrill the souls
Of all who meet them here.

There are others who go through life like a cloud
That casts its shadow below;
And their gloom seems to fall upon all whom they meet:
What's their mission, I'd like to know.

THOMSON'S TOP YIELD PFISTER HYBRID SEED CORN
Frankfort, Illinois.

There are those whose smile seems to lift you up
Till you see the blue sky above:
They have a real mission who impart such a smile
From a heart that is filled with love.

There are others whose smile is a cynical smile,
And you know that it's not sincere,
And it seems to pierce as though it had fangs:
What is their mission here?

A mission have those who are ready to come
To the aid of a needy brother;
No matter how busy, or pressed for time,
They have time to help another.

The following six verses are from DREAMING WHILE AWAKE, a poem of eleven verses, written by Mr. Creer, April 12, 1937, three days after a mastoid operation:

It seemed that I stood near the edge of the grave
And I watched my sun sink low
In the western sky on a storm-swept night,
And I felt the chill winds blow.

Then I prayed that God would hold my hand,
That I still had some work to do:
And the answer came, "Be thou not afraid,
Thy faith shall guide thee through."

The storm increased, the night grew dark,
But my faith grew strong and firm;
And the morning came, and the skies grew clear,
And the tide began to turn.

And I visioned the sky again blue overhead,
And the body healed and strong.
I was ready to take up life's burden anew
In the ranks where I belong.

And I found myself traveling life's highway again,
And I marched with the crowd down the road;
And I found a poor soul that was staggering along,
And I helped him to carry his load.

And it seemed that it wasn't so heavy to bear,
And I seemed to have strength anew;
And I could hear the words, "Do unto others
As ye would have them do unto you."

Some Of The Whys of Hybrid Corn

While we may have heard and talked of hybrid corn for the past years, and often during that time viewed commercial hybrid corn, or inspected the hybrid show ears, we have, in the past, considered it something special and apart from our farming practice. Accordingly, we did not make it our business to learn definitely the nature of hybrid corn, or how it was brought about, and in the more or less general discussion that we happened to have with others on the subject we may have picked up erroneous impressions of what this corn was and what it would do.

In the past five years, however, the development of hybrid corn has been most rapid, and this particularly because of the more positive control corn breeders were attaining in breeding practice. A good deal of this came about through corn breeders learning that the desirable characters in hybrid corn, such as high yield, disease resistance, upright, sturdy stalk, etc., were correlated with vigorous, quick-growing extensive root structure. After learning this fact, we could readily realize that the better root system was the better forager for plant food, and particularly for soil minerals; and that it would reach lower soil strata for food and water.

We also recognized why the hybrid plant stood more erect and failed to lean under wind conditions that caused the learning or bending over of stalks.

While greater root structure means a better feeder, it does not mean that hybrid corn can get from the soil what is not there, but it does mean that the plant goes after soil plan food more vigorously than ordinary open pollinated corn; and, if we plant hybrid to increase our corn yields, we must see that the plant food is in the soil so that this more active forager can get it.

The economically important plant food elements are nitrogen, potassium, phosphorus and calcium. The other elements either come from the air or we have an abundance of them in the soil, such as sulphur, iron and magnesium. Of the economically important ones, nitrogen would cost the most, next potassium, then phosphorus. Nitrogen is concerned in the structure of the leaves in the vegetative stage, and later translocated to the grain in the form of protein. Potassium is concerned in the development of the stalk or stem and later in the fixation of carbon as starch, but before maturity largely moved back to the stalk or stem. Phosphorus is the element concerned in root structure, and later translocated to the embryo of the seed to make the rootlets of the seedling in the new cycle of life. Where we have a plant with outstandingly more extensive root structure, we know that it is a higher phosphorus feeder, and takes more phosphorus to make its possible yields.

Therefore, we appreciate why hybrid corn is limited in making its more abundant growth in a phosphorus deficient soil, and makes more response to an ample phosphorus supply than does ordinary corn. With the greater yield of hybrid, however, more phosphorus is removed from the soil; consequently, with hybrid practice, response to phosphorus replenishment or application is more noted.

In the growth of hybrid seed, an abundance of soil phosphorus is essential for storage in the embryo of the seed that makes the greater and more vigorous growth of the hybrid seedling when grown by the farmer.

Farmers, therefore, when selecting hybrid seed corn should assure themselves that it was grown on soil having an abundant phosphorus supply.

Hybrid corn responds more to good soil practices, including application of lime as well as phosphorus,

Excess Taxation Vicious Circle
The more money the New Deal wastes, says Governor Alf Landon, the more it has to tax the people. The more taxes are imposed, the less food and clothing people can buy and the less they can set aside for education, building of homes, construction of factories and the improvement of farms. Every dollar the New Deal takes for taxes means just one dollar less for production and jobs.

and in turn pays better returns on good soil practices, but hybrid corn never will be a substitute or cure-all for poor practices, or poor farming. It won't make poor farming pay. It will make good farming pay better. Good farming is making better yields, while at the same time replacing the withdrawals from the soil, including the organic matter that is oxidized through tillage. We can make better soil while making it pay better.

What Do You Know About Health?

By FISHER BROWN and NAT FALK

1. DO CHILDREN HAVE TO HAVE THE SO-CALLED "CHILDHOOD DISEASES"?

2. WHY ARE MONKEYS PARTICULARLY VALUABLE IN THE FIGHT AGAINST INFANTILE PARALYSIS?

Answers:
1. No. That old-fashioned notion should be relegated to the ash heap. As a matter of fact, doctors today use every weapon of modern medical science to prevent the childhood diseases.
2. The discoverer of cocaine. Some fifty-two years ago, Koller, then but 27 years old and but two years out of medical school, discovered the anesthetic action of cocaine. To specialists in the field of the eye and of the nose and throat, Koller's discovery was of greater significance than was that of general anesthesia.

3. Because they are the only animals, other than humans, in which it is possible to induce the disease. Whatever progress science is making in its difficult battle with infantile paralysis is due to the experiments being made on the monkey.

SYNOPSIS

Brooke Reyburn visits the office of Jed Stewart, a lawyer, to discuss the terms of an estate she has inherited from Mrs. Mary Armada Dane. Unwittingly she overhears Jed talking to Mark Trent, nephew of Mrs. Dane who has been disinherited. Mrs. Dane had lived at Lookout House, a huge structure by the sea, built by her father and divided into two, for her and Mark's father. Brooke had been a fashion expert, and Mrs. Dane, a "shut-in," hearing her on the radio, had invited her to share the estate with a deep affection for her. Mark discloses that Mrs. Dane had threatened to disinherit him if he married Lola, from whom he is now divorced. He says he does not trust Henri and Clotilde Jacques, Mrs. Dane's servants. He says he is not interested in an offer of Brooke's to share the estate with him. Leaving her department store job, Brooke refuses an offer to "go stepping" with Jerry Field, a carefree young man who wants to marry her. At a family conference she learns she must live at Lookout House alone, since Lucette, her younger sister who is taking her job, her brother, Sam, a young playwright, and her mother plan to stay in the city. Jed and Mark are astounded when they hear from Mrs. Gregory, a family friend, that she had witnessed a hitherto unknown will with Henri and Clotilde two weeks before Mrs. Dane died. Brooke had arrived just as she was leaving. Jed suggests that Mark open his part of Lookout House, get friendly with Brooke and try to find out about the will. Jed agrees to stay with him. Mark accepts Brooke's invitation for a family Thanksgiving dinner at Lookout. Mrs. Reyburn announces on Thanksgiving eve that she has been invited to England. Sam and Lucette decide to move in with Brooke and Sam plans to produce a new play locally. After the Thanksgiving dinner Brooke tells Mark that little of Mrs. Dane's silver collection is left. Jerry Field and his sister Daphne drop in and announce they will be neighbors for the winter. Sam adds them to the cast of his play. Later Inspector Harrison of the local police visits Mark and is informed about the missing will and silver. As Harrison leaves, Lola arrives. She announces that she and her new husband, Bert Hunt, have started a neighborhood filling station. Mark almost makes a break about the missing will and Brooke is suspicious. Returning home, she sees Lola talking covertly to Henri. "Mr. McEwen," Mrs. Dane's pet parrot, is missing. Henri is ugly and warns Brooke she had better like him and Clotilde.

CHAPTER VI—Continued

She reached the question and a door at the same time. As Mark Trent opened it, a slightly musty smell, a blend of camphor and old books and ancient furniture, stole out. He motioned with the flash in his hand. Brooke's eyes followed the light. She set her teeth hard in her lips to keep back an exclamation of astonishment. On a large table, illumined by the spotlight, surrounded by boxes and trunks and storeroom litter, was a massive tea-service and perhaps a dozen dishes and pitchers of silver, tarnished to a light copper color. A scrap of paper drifted to the floor.

"It's a great hide-out, isn't it?" She nodded in answer to the low, amused question.

"When did you discover it?"

"Thought I heard strange sounds upstairs when Jed and I were waiting for you in the living-room the other afternoon. The Japs' rooms are in the L on the first floor, and when I had this house opened I told the caretaker not to touch the third. After you and Mrs. Gregory left, I investigated and found this silver. I've been on the watch ever since to discover who put it here. This afternoon someone slipped a cog, and left both keys; must have been frightened off, or else they were left purposely so that a second party might have access to the loot."

"Who put the loot, as you call it, in that room?"

"That's what you and I will find out."

That "you and I" was fuse to dynamite. Brooke leaned back against the balustrade.

"You will, you mean, you and your sleuth Jed Stewart. You and he are spies, aren't you? Amateur detectives. Mark, to you, you say to Sam, and all the time you are spying on his sister and accusing her of 'undue influence,' of hypnotizing an old woman into leaving her a fortune. I ought to have known what you thought of me when you said that. I do now. Find out who stole the silver. You've put Inspector Harrison on the case, haven't you? I wish you luck."

She jerked her wrist free and ran down the stairs. She stopped at the foot of them. A tirade like that she had just delivered took one's breath for a minute. Why, why had she let Mark the Magnificent know that she suspected his reason for occupying the house? She, who had prided herself on her self-control in business? Why couldn't she be diplomatic? Her outrageous temper was the answer. Thank Heaven she had had sense enough not to tell him of Henri's threat that he could put her out of Lookout House.

A sound! Someone had touched the knob on the other side of the door! Had the person remembered that both keys had been left? Now—now Mark and she would find out who had taken the silver.

Stealthily she touched the button and plunged the top floor into darkness. She raced up the stairs. Caromed into Mark Trent coming out of the storeroom. She clutched his sleeve; whispered:

"Shut the door! Quick! Someone is fumbling at the hall key. Perhaps he'll come for this one."

He held her by one arm as he noiselessly closed the door. In the dark he drew her into another room. Side by side they waited. Brooke's heart shook her body. How could the man so near her help hearing it thump in the tomblike silence?

A spot of light. Creeping up! Creeping up! Her breath caught in a gasp. An arm slipped round her shoulders and held her so close that the scent of the crushed gardenias was sickish.

"Sssh! Mustn't let him know we are here!" Mark Trent whispered.

The spot of light illumined the key in the door, illumined the black-gloved hand which gently turned it and as gently drew it out.

Mark Trent felt the hard beating of the girl's heart as his arm tightened about her shoulders, the softness of her skin against his hand. He didn't dare release her for fear she might make a sound and reveal their presence to the unknown person in the hall. What a good little sport she was. She had followed him into his house with no embarrassment, but with a modern girl's interpretation of propriety, her ignoring of outworn conventions. Just the same, he wished fervently that she was back in her own living-room in that chair before the fire, for there was no dodging the fact that black-gloved fingers had withdrawn the key from the lock. To whom had they belonged? The words on the scrap of paper he had picked up from the floor of the storeroom and replaced on the table teased his mind.

"Make X on cover when—" That was all. What cover? Much as he wanted to know, he couldn't let Brooke Reyburn get mixed up in the mess. When he had discovered the silver, his first thought had been of her and the thrill she would get from seeing it. If he hadn't brought her, he would be on the man's neck by this time.

It seemed hours that he stood rigid, listening, with the only sound the underground roar of a great city, the faint wail of the distant siren, and the girl's unsteady breathing. He strained his ears. Was a door being closed cautiously, or was his imagination playing tricks? He must find out. He couldn't stay here forever. He put his mouth close to Brooke's ear. He felt the softness of her hair against his face.

"Don't move. Don't speak. I'll come back."

Whenever in after life he smelled the fragrance of a gardenia, he would remember this night, he told himself.

He took a cautious step into the hall. Listened. The house was so quiet that he could hear the tick of the old clock on the stairs. He tiptoed to the door of the room in which he had found the silver and ran his fingers lightly over the knob. The key was gone.

He felt his way down; he didn't dare use the flash. The lamp in the lower hall provided a faint light. Gently he turned the knob of the connecting door. It was locked.

Someone had followed him down the stairs! He felt a presence. Fool, not to have suspected that an accomplice might be hidden in the dark. He shouldn't have left Brooke. He must get back to her no matter who was between them.

He wheeled with pantherlike agility. Raised his flashlight to bring it crashing down on a head.

"Mark! Mark!"

It was Brooke Reyburn's voice, her hand on his arm. The stiffening went out of his knees. Relief was submerged in a mighty rush of anger as he gripped her shoulders.

"What do you mean by coming down when I told you not to move? What do you mean? I might have struck you!"

"But you didn't, Mark. I felt like a quitter hiding in the dark while you came down alone, so I crept after you. What did you see?"

"Nothing here—but the door is locked."

"A black-gloved hand did pull the key from the storeroom door, didn't it? I didn't dream it, did I?"

"If you did, I was in the same dream, Brooke. Wonder when they intend to remove the stuff."

"You think someone is planning to take it away?"

"Why else should it be there? It probably was moved from Lookout House to this one, which has been unoccupied for years, before I came back here to live. After Aunt Mary Amanda went, I was the only person who would know about the silver, and I was far away in South America. That's why Henri's face turned chalky when he saw me enter your living-room on Thanksgiving day."

"Then you noticed it too? I thought it might be my imagination."

"He was white, all right. Come on, we can't get back to Lookout House through this door. We'd better beat it downstairs and out that way. Lucky I pocketed your key."

"Hurry! Hurry! Suppose it was Henri who left those keys in the doors? Suppose he remembered that he had left them and stole back from the movies? I told him that you and Jed Stewart would be with us for supper after rehearsal. He may be looking for me now to see if I was telling the truth."

In the lower hall, which was slightly scented by the smoky aroma of open fires, Mark laid a detaining hand on her shoulder.

"Wait! Listen!" The stillness of the high-ceilinged rooms was accentuated by the low moan of the wind at the corner of the house, by the muted thunder of the sea, by the sharp crackle of a burning log; was haunted by the weird wail of the distant siren, but no human sound intruded.

"Coast's clear. Let's go. Hold on!" Mark Trent frowned at her bare arms and throat, ivory tinted above the lace of her frock. "You need a wrap."

"To go from one door to another! Don't be foolish. If we don't hurry, Henri may get there before us."

In the green-walled living-room at Lookout House, Mark Trent threw a log on the smoldering fire and poked it into flame.

"Come here and get warm, Brooke. You are still shivering."

"If I am, it is from excitement, not cold." She toasted her fingers at the blaze. What do we do next?"

"Watchful waiting seems our best bet."

"You would say that."

"I don't like the implication, but we'll let that ride—for the present. What move would you suggest?"

"I don't know, but let's do something. I hate sitting on the sidelines. I hate waiting. First we must find out who took the key from the storeroom door. If you hadn't held me, I would have dashed at him and found out."

"I had a hunch you would; that's why I grabbed you. Afraid I crushed your gardenia."

Brooke put her hand to her shoulder. "They're gone! Where could I have lost them?"

"Don't make a tragedy of it. I'll get you another."

Mark Trent had never seen brown eyes so flamingly gold, cheeks so red as Brooke's.

"I'm not making a tragedy of it, and I don't want another gardenia. For an amateur detective—amateur is the word with a capital A—you are dense, Mark Trent. Suppose the person in the attic went back for something and picked them up? Wouldn't he know at once that he was being watched?"

"I thought of that so—I brought this along." He held a flower in the palm of his hand. The once waxen petals were brown at the edges, but they had the feel of velvet in his fingers. "You don't want it now, do you?" He slipped it back into his pocket. "I'll keep it as a souvenir of our late dive into the underworld."

"I do want it and the other too."

"Because Field gave them to you? I don't know where the other is; didn't realize that there were two. You dropped this as you came into this house. Better let me keep it. Would you want him to know that it had been crushed out of shape against my shoulder?"

"Just why should Jerry assume that it was your shoulder against which the gardenia was crushed? You are not the only man in my life, you know," Brooke reminded disdainfully.

"I intend—to keep the flower."

Mark Trent felt the color surge to his hair and recede. He had caught back "to be" in time.

"I haven't had a chance, Brooke, to tell you how ridiculous Mrs. Hunt's suggestion was—that that I had any thought of trying to keep Aunt Mary Amanda's money in the family by—"

"Why stumble over it? Why tell me again that you wouldn't marry me? This is the second time. First in Jed Stewart's office and now here. To save a third attempt to impress the fact on me, I'll tell you that I wouldn't marry you if you were the only man in the world. Divorced men leave me cold. Sometime perhaps I'll have the privilege of refusing to marry you."

He knew now the sensation of a knife being plunged into his heart. He drew the gardenia from his pocket and dropped it into her lap.

"Here it is. Water may revive it."

She twirled the stem in her fingers.

"It is past recovery." She flung it into the wastebasket. "I don't care for rejuvenated gardenias any more than I care for warmed-over love. That sounds like a car. Can they have come so soon?"

"Better not speak of what we discovered," Mark suggested hastily, as she started for the hall.

She left the room without answering. He salvaged the flower and thrust it into his pocket. He was not keeping it for sentimental reasons, he assured himself, but as a reminder of how near he had come to forgetting that all he had to offer a girl was "warmed-over" love.

Sam Reyburn entered the living-room and flung his blue covered script to the table. He dropped into the wing chair with a groan. Voices in the hall thinned in the distance. Mark Trent could distinguish Jerry Field's laugh, Lucette's rather high-pitched tone, Brooke's questioning murmur, and Daphne's drawl. He looked at the dejected figure in the chair, at the long legs outstretched.

"What's wrong, Sam? Aren't you home early?"

"What's wrong with you, you're white as a sheet?"

"I'm okay, it's these artistic lights that play the dickens with one's color. Didn't Stewart and the rest of the cast come with you?"

Lesson for August 15

GOD GIVES LAWS TO A NATION.

LESSON TEXT—Exodus 20:1-17.
GOLDEN TEXT—Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. Matt. 22:37, 39.

PRIMARY TOPIC—God's Good Laws.
JUNIOR TOPIC—Before the Mount of God.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Why a Nation Needs Laws.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Basic Laws for a Nation's Life.

Basic laws have been laid down by God for the orderly administration of his universe. Men see them clearly in the physical universe, although at times they do not recognize the One who created all things.

Physical laws are of great importance, but of even deeper significance are the moral and spiritual laws which control the human life. There is in the world a moral law—a distinction between right and wrong—which man may ignore only to his own sorrow, and which he cannot abrogate or destroy. All laws of men which are true and right are founded on this underlying moral law, and are in reality simply a development and interpretation of "God's Code of Morals"—the Ten Commandments.

These commandments given to Israel at Mt. Sinai are worthy of careful study on the part of every reader. They may be grouped under two divisions.

I. A True View of God (vv. 1-11).

The first and most important question to be asked regarding any law is, "By whom was it established?" Legislation by an unauthorized person or organization has no power over others. Who gave the ten commandments? Verse 1 tells us "God spake all these words."

Men sneer at theology as being out-moded, but the fact is that Christian doctrine is the only safe foundation for Christian character. Unless my view of God is right, my life will be wrong. Until I know him I will not appreciate the authority of his law.

1. Whom to worship (vv. 2-5). There can be but one true God, and he alone is to be worshiped. He is a personal being, ready to enter into communion with each one of us. No image can take his place.

2. How to worship (vv. 6, 7). We are to love him and keep his commandments. There is to be no sham about this, for no matter how sweet and pious may be the praise and prayer of a man, he has taken the Lord's name in vain unless he keeps the Lord's commandments by holy living.

3. When to worship (vv. 8-11). God has ordained that man should not incessantly bear the burden of toil. He is to have a day of rest and a time for worship, undisturbed by the duties and responsibilities of daily labor. America needs a mighty stirring up about the desecration of the Lord's day.

II. A Right Relationship to Man (vv. 12-17).

To be right with God means that we will also be right with our fellow man.

1. Family life (v. 12). The fifth commandment has to do with the relation between child and parent. There is a plain and direct command that father and mother should be honored. Only in respect and obedience to parents can the child possibly find true and proper development.

2. Physical life (vv. 13, 14). God is interested in our bodies. Already we have noted his provision for a day of rest each week. Now we are reminded of the sanctity of human life. "Thou shalt not kill," and remember there are many other ways to kill a man than by shooting him. Dr. Wilbur M. Smith makes a telling point by reminding us that we may kill others by selling them tainted food, intoxicating liquors, or "dope;" by neglect of duty, by careless driving, by failing to provide employees with sanitary and healthful surroundings.

There is another way that the body may be destroyed—by its misuse in adulterous living.

3. Social life (vv. 15-17). "Thou shalt not steal"—and remember any dishonest appropriation of what does not belong to you is stealing—call it what you will. And "false witness"—how it has honeycombed our very civilization. Not a little of it is found within the church, more shame upon us! Lastly, we come to "covetousness"—which has been called one of "the respectable sins of nice people." It is subtle and often hidden. Let us root it out of our own lives by God's grace.

Enthusiasm in Work

Enthusiasm is the element of success in everything. It is the light that leads and the strength that lifts men on and up in the great struggles of scientific pursuits and of professional labor. It robs endurance of difficulty, and makes a pleasure of duty.—Bishop Doane.

A Translation

Let us learn what death is. It is simply a translation; not a state, but an act; not a condition, but a passage.

The Curse of Progress

The Hard Way
Sammy was not prone to overexertion in the classroom. Therefore his mother was both surprised and pleased when he came home with the announcement: "I got a hundred this morning."
"That's lovely, dear," she said, as she kissed the boy tenderly. "What was it in?" she asked.
"Fifty in composition and fifty in grammar."—Army & Navy Journal.

Emergency
A doctor had an urgent phone call from a gentleman saying his small son had swallowed his fountain pen.
"All right! I'll come at once," replied the doctor. "What are you doing in the meantime?"
Whereupon came the unexpected answer, "Using a pencil."

Robber
"See that man? He looks honest, but he defrauded me of half a million."
"Impossible."
"Yes, he refused me the hand of his daughter."

OF INTEREST TO THE HOUSEWIFE

Clear Blueing.—To prevent blueing from streaking clothes on washday, dissolve a tablespoon of soda in the "blue" water.

Removing Tar.—Tar is easily removed from the hands and clothing with lard, followed by warm water and soap.

Heat the Nail.—Before hammering a nail into the wall either heat the end over a gas jet or hold it in boiling water for a few seconds. If the nail is treated in this way the plaster will not crumble and the nail will hold firmly for a far longer period than otherwise.

Summer Salad.—Peel and cut into small squares or slices 6 medium-sized potatoes (boiled), add 3 tablespoons grated onion, 2 tablespoonfuls chopped parsley, 2 tablespoonfuls chopped carrot, 2 tablespoonfuls chopped cucumber, 2 tablespoonfuls chopped celery or beetroot. Pour over a generous supply of French dressing and set aside for several hours. Garnish with mustard and cress or shredded lettuce.

Watch Your Kidneys!

Help Them Cleanse the Blood of Harmful Body Waste
Your kidneys are constantly filtering waste matter from the blood stream. But kidneys sometimes lag in their work—do not act as Nature intended—fail to remove impurities that, if retained, may poison the system and upset the whole body machinery.
Symptoms may be nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—a feeling of nervous anxiety and loss of pep and strength. Other signs of kidney or bladder disorder may be burning, scanty or too frequent urination.
There should be no doubt that prompt treatment is wiser than neglect. Use Doan's Pills. Doan's have been winning new friends for more than forty years. They have a nation-wide reputation. Are recommended by grateful people the country over. Ask your neighbor!
